MARCH MADNESS

IRISH SODA BREAD!

It's the perfect complement to a hearty Saint Patrick's Day feast, and makes awesome toast the day after! Traditionally, it's a bread that you eat fresh with a pat of butter and a touch of jam with a hot cuppa tea. Irish Soda Bread began being made in the Irish Isles around 1840 when bi-carbonate of soda (baking soda) was introduced. The baking soda is a substitute for yeast as a leavening agent.

As far as the cross sliced in the top, some believe it could have been to ward off evil, but the majority consensus seems to be that it aided in baking or served as a guide for equal quarters or slices. We think it makes the bread open up into the shape of a shamrock!

This delightful bread soon became a staple of the Irish diet, served warm or toasted with butter and preserves or as an accompaniment to a meal. Sláinte
